COMMENTARY

During August the fund (Class A USD) fell 1.4% while the benchmark (JPM 1 month USD Cash) rose 0.2% and the JPM Broad Global Bond Index fell 0.01%.

The fund gave back the gains made in July as spreads widened and emerging market currencies fell. We observe that Argentina and Turkey are at the heart of investor unease due to their poor economic fundamentals. Other EM economies are in relatively good shape but their currencies have suffered by association. We think there are some very attractive yields on offer in emerging markets but will remain cautiously selective and to date have an exposure of around 15%.

While our central case is for rising yields from here we moved our duration stance to a positive level during August as we considered the potential risks from Brexit, trade wars and the rise of populism in Italy. Any of these events could potentially cause further weakness in credit and we also observe a surprising level of complacency in equity markets. Our approach is to run a barbell strategy which combines our best credit ideas with a position in long dated US Treasury bonds, some of which is held in the form of call options. The advantage of options being that they have limited downside impact should yields rise from here.
